Life is short

One thing is certain

There are more important things than how you do on your final projects and exams

Don't lose perspective

Be kind to yourself

Cinco de Mayo

Monday is Cinco de Mayo, and it is taking all of our restraint not to make an alcohol-related joke about that.

One misconception is that it's Mexico's Independence Day, which actually falls on September 16th.

Cinco de Mayo actually originated in Mexican-American communities during the American Civil War to celebrate freedom, democracy, and Mexican heritage, after a Mexican military victory over the invading French Army in 1862. Wow! The more you know!

Mother's Day

Mother's Day is this Sunday! Even though you're buried in books, you can still...

-send your mom the iMovie you made as a final project (after dubbing in "mom" at appropriate points) for a thoughtful, homemade gift

-FedEx your laundry home to show that even though you've left the nest you still need her

-Flowers. The quintessential way of saying, "I care [enough to buy you this generic gift]."

-T-shirt that says "She wants the D*" on the front and "*dad" on the back

-Call her. She'll be happy to hear your voice!

"We have to believe we're not endangered or we'll all go mad."

Quiz Answers

If you answered mostly a's, you're Eliot Fête. You probably have an accent in your name and you're not afraid to correct people if they spell it wrong. Hearing about the free market and its wealth of opportunities is your erotica.

If you answered mostly b's, you're Adams House's airport themed spring formal. What? Friends describe you as "quirky" and "eccentric," and you're not sure whether to take this as an insult or a compliment (it's an insult).

If you answered mostly c's, you're Spring Soirée! You also have an accent in your name, but you're not an asshole about enforcing the spelling. You're a fun, even-keeled individual with everything going for you. Congratulations on being the cool person we know you are.
