Mather Blather

This week, we asked about your craziest spring break story. Here are some of your best submissions:

- “I visited 21 cities in three weeks” (while studying abroad in Europe)
- “Drunken coed skinny dipping with a certain women's club sport”
- “While in Puerto Rico, we decided to rent a car to visit the rainforest. Because we were all under 21, the only place we could rent one from was a sketchy local truck rental place by the side of the freeway - and as luck would have it, the only way to get there was by walking along the freeway for about 50 feet. While walking, we were "pulled over" by the Puerto Rican police. They were concerned about our safety, but there were too many of us to ride in their car, so they slowly tailed us along the side of the freeway (blocking traffic for about 10 min). As this was happening, I tell my roommate "I am SO glad we are in Puerto Rico right now and know absolutely no one, otherwise this would be SO embarrassing.” As soon as the words leave my mouth I get a text from a Harvard friend – “Is that you walking alongside the highway in Puerto Rico being tailed by a cop right now?" SHE JUST SO HAPPENED TO BE DRIVING PAST WITH 5 OTHER PEOPLE I KNEW FROM HARVARD AT THAT MOMENT. We then proceeded to accidentally "stalk" this Harvard group for the next three days - we showed up to the rainforest, only to find them returning. We go to the Bacardi factory, only to find them sitting there already, we drive down the road, only to find them driving the opposite direction, and we climb the castle ruins, only to find them already at the top. Talk about awkward accidental creeping!”
